Risk Management

Risk identification, assessment and treatment based on ISO 31000: appetite, controls and continuous monitoring.

> I build risk management that moves off the page and onto the executive agenda: defined appetite, controls with named owners, and monitoring that informs decisions.

CORE CAPABILITIES

Risk maturity assessment — I measure the current stage against ISO 31000 and deliver the critical path to the next level, not a compliance report.

Risk appetite and tolerance — I translate the leadership's stance into numerical limits the operation can actually apply day to day.

Risk register and matrix — I identify, assess and prioritize risks with the process owners, so the matrix is born with an accountable owner rather than an adjective.

Control and monitoring design — I set controls proportional to the risk and KRIs that give warning before the event, not after it.

Risk governance implementation — I establish the committee, the review routines and the reporting flow to the executive board, with an agenda that fits the meeting.

Team and leadership training — I train the people who will sustain the system after the consultant leaves.

EVIDENCE

Federal regulatory agency

A single corporate risk taxonomy implemented in 18 months: 177 risks catalogued, including integrity risks built jointly with the Integrity Management Unit, with every organizational unit covered. Standardization enabled vertical analysis by unit, by process, by project and by the organization as a whole, and connected risk management to strategic planning, the value chain and the process architecture. The structure remains in operation after handover to the internal team.

HOW I WORK

Maturity assessment — review of the current stage against ISO 31000, with a prioritized critical path to the next level.

Implementation project — full structuring, from appetite to committee governance, with capability transfer to the internal team as the closing criterion.

In-company training — training for teams and leaders, from conceptual foundations to operating the organization's own risk matrix.

Hands-on workshops — working sessions in which the team itself identifies, assesses and prioritizes its own risks, with a finished deliverable at the end of each one.

Ongoing advisory — support through the review cycles and to the committee, so the structure does not lose traction in its second year.

Talks and keynotes — sessions at corporate events, boards and leadership development programs.

Scope and duration are defined by each organization's size, current maturity and urgency.

Let's talk about where your organization stands today.
